Contractors In Iraq

Subject: Contractors in Iraq

Just read a message on GI Special regarding contractors in Iraq.

My husband has worked as a contractor in post war countries for many years. He agreed to go to Iraq post war.

He was flown in a few hours after the Mission Accomplished Speech.

He was lied to, the war wasn't over. When he told his employer it was too dangerous to be working there he was told to stay anyway. He was blown up.

He was used, to give the appearance that things were OK in Iraq.

After this happened to my husband there were still people working for his company agreeing to go over there and work. In fact they were begging for the positions though there was no longer any doubt that it was very dangerous.

I am still trying to find the answer to the question "When did it become OK to send civilians into war zones?" Who changed the rules? Why isn't there an outrage?

These contractors are aiding and abetting this administration in their lies about this war and how poorly our military is being treated and supplied and paid.

Anything I can do to help you all I will do.

Marcie H: www.acinetobacter.org

REPLY: Exposing wrongs, as you do here, is help. The more people know, the less able to government is to get away with wrongdoing and abuse, especially, as you point out, "their lies about this war." Silence gives consent, but as millions of people see through the lies, they begin to rise up, and once that process is under way, no handful of politicians in Washington can stop it.

What are they going to do? Call out the troops? Tell the troops to fire on their brothers, sisters, wives, mothers and fathers for protesting the war and the evils the government does? If only they're stupid enough to try it. We should be so lucky. T

Woman Says Son Is Among Fallen Soldiers; "I Did Not Like The Idea Of Him Going"

July 26 Associated Press

Cathy Brunson told The Albany Herald newspaper that Army officials notified her Monday of the death of her son, Jacques "Gus" Brunson. The woman said she did not know her son's rank.

"Unfortunately, I did not like to talk to him about this because I did not like the idea of him going," she told the newspaper.

Brunson had two children, Kayla, 9, and Jake, 8.

The brigade's 4,300 citizen-soldiers make up the largest combat unit of the Georgia National Guard to deploy since World War II. The brigade includes about 150 Gainesville-based soldiers.

NEED SOME TRUTH? CHECK OUT THE NEW TRAVELING SOLDIER

Telling the truth - about the occupation or the criminals running the government in Washington - is the first reason for Traveling Soldier. But we want to do more than tell the truth; we want to report on the resistance - whether it's in the streets of Baghdad, New York, or inside the armed forces. Our goal is for Traveling Soldier to become the thread that ties working-class people inside the armed services together. We want this newsletter to be a weapon to help you organize resistance within the armed forces. If you like what you've read, we hope that you'll join with us in building a network of active duty organizers.

7/26/2005 By AMIR SHAH, The Associated Press, BAGRAM, Afghanistan

More than 1,000 stone-throwing Afghans tried to break down an outer gate at the main U.S. base here Tuesday while demanding the release of eight detained villagers, and Afghan troops fired warning shots and used clubs to beat the mob back. U.S. troops also fired into the air.

It was not immediately clear if there were any casualties in the melee outside the base's main gate as protesters chanted "Die America!"

Black smoke billowed from burning tires. An Associated Press reporter was hit by a stone and an AP photographer was punched by a protester.

The violence in Bagram erupted when six U.S. military vehicles tried to enter the base. Demonstrators massed outside to protest the arrests threw stones at the convoy and soldiers in the vehicles fired into the air with handguns.

The convoy sped into the base and the mob chased after them, trying to push down a metal gate guarded by Afghan troops. Some soldiers beat the protesters with clubs and several fired assault rifles into the air as they shouted for the protesters to go home. Most dispersed.

The eight men arrested late Monday "had materials used to make improvised explosive devices in their possession and are thought to be planning future attacks against coalition forces," the U.S. military said in a statement.

Demonstrators said they were angry that American soldiers arrested the men without consulting local authorities.

"We have supported the Americans for years. We should be treated with dignity," said Shah Aghar, 35.

"They are arresting our people without the permission of the government. They are breaking into our houses and offending the people. We are very angry."

There has been little violence in the Bagram area since U.S. forces helped oust the Taliban regime at the end of 2001 and took control of the base. [That's over.]

One protester, Abdul Rahman, said that if the U.S. forces continued to raid people's houses, Afghans would launch a "holy war against them as we did against the Soviets and Taliban."

TLS "Premature"

7.26.05 By Paul Wiseman USA Today

JABAK, Afghanistan — The offer is tempting: The U.S. soldiers say they can repair a collapsed irrigation tunnel in this parched village in southern Afghanistan's Zabul province.

Jabak needs the extra water. However, village elder Haji Safi Mohammed, 70, knows that accepting American assistance is dangerous. He fears that after the U.S. troops drive away in their Humvees, local Taliban fighters will come back down from their hide-outs in the hills, seeking retribution against anyone who cooperated with the Americans.

“If the Talibs saw me standing here with you, they would kill me,” Mohammed tells Army Capt. Benjamin White. “Everyone comes here in force — you, the Taliban. We are powerless. We cannot do anything.”

“I will help you,” White says through an interpreter.

Mohammed looks skeptical. “God will help me,” he replies.

Capt. Dirk Ringgenberg, rotating out as Chosen Company commander, stopped on July 18 at Kandahar Air Field where Taliban forces were bombed into submission in 2001. He was at the U.S. base there to await the flight that would take him home to Vermont for two weeks’ leave.

Walking into an office called TLS, a reference to the “Taliban’s Last Stand,” Ringgenberg looked up: “That was premature.”

Soldier Makes A Final Visit Home

Chuck Woods of Des Moines, Iowa, pauses by the casket of Spc. Hoby F. Bradfield Jr., left, after a memorial service in Virginia Beach on Monday. Woods' son Eric, a combat medic, was coming to the aid of Bradfield when the ambulance evacuating them was destroyed by a roadside bomb, killing both men. Pfc. Eric P. Woods was buried last week. VIRGINIA BEACH - At the front of the chapel, beside the flag-draped coffin, stood a small table covered with medals and a patriotic portrait.

In the center of this memorial was Spc. Hoby F. Bradfield Jr.'s black Stetson, with its crossed saber insignia, the mark of a cavalry trooper.

Bradfield was back in the community he considered home, in a brief stop before his body is laid to rest at 3 p.m. today at Arlington National Cemetery.

The 2001 graduate of Green Run High School, who saw the carnage of Sept. 11, 2001, and immediately called to enlist, was killed in Tal Afar, Iraq, on July 9.

Spc. Hoby F. Bradfield Jr. Bradfield became one of about 1,778 U.S. service members to be killed in Iraq since the war began in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

Bradfield was wounded during a "dismounted cordon search" of the northwestern Iraqi town, the Pentagon reported, but he was killed later when the ambulance evacuating him was destroyed by a roadside bomb.

Bradfield, 22, came from a military family. Both his father and stepfather served in the Navy. One brother is a Cavalry scout, and another is a Marine guarding the U.S. Embassy in Kenya, his mother, Diane J. Sterling, told LNC Cable Channel 5 before a memorial service at Altmeyer Funeral Home .

It was Bradfield's second tour in Iraq, his mother said. He had asked to go back even though his wife, Crystin , was pregnant with their first child.

Bradfield's brother Jared choked back tears as he spoke to the crowd of friends and relatives. "I've never really had a hero, except for Hoby," he said, describing him as a person full of joy and love.

"I hope some day I can be that man," he said. "I want to be the man that he was."

After most had left the chapel, a family walked up and quietly approached the coffin. Chuck Woods touched the flag with reverence, then walked to the memorial table.

He touched the Bronze Star given to Bradfield for meritorious service and "the ultimate sacrifice," then touched the Purple Heart. Tearing up, he tapped the Purple Heart on the lapel of his jacket.

Last week, Woods and his wife, Jan, buried their son, Pfc. Eric P. Woods, in Des Moines, Iowa.

Eric Woods, 26, was the combat medic who had rushed to Bradfield's aid. He died when a bomb blew up under their ambulance.

"We wanted to express our condolences to Hoby's family," Jan Woods said.

And, she said, to make a connection between families whose sons shared their final moments together.

Iraq? The Public “Doesn't Really Believe In The Mission”

July 23 By THOM SHANKER, New York Times

"Nobody in America is asked to sacrifice, except us," said one officer just back from a yearlong tour in Iraq, voicing a frustration now drawing the attention of academic specialists in military sociology.

David C. Hendrickson, a scholar on foreign policy and the presidency at Colorado College, said, "Bush understands that the support of the public for war - especially the war in Iraq - is conditioned on demanding little of the public."

"The public wants very much to support the troops" in Iraq, he said.

"But it doesn't really believe in the mission. Most consider it a war of choice, and a majority - although a thin one - thinks it was the wrong choice."

National Guard Top General Admits Guard Is A “Business” -- Says Recruiting Goals “Artificial” And “Meaningless”

July 25, 2005 By Joseph R. Chenelly, Army Times staff writer

The National Guard Bureau's top general said it will likely miss its recruiting goal for fiscal 2005, and that its end strength is short nearly 20,000 soldiers.

The Army National Guard's overall end strength is about 6 percent, or 19,700 soldiers, below what it is supposed to be, Lt. Gen Steven Blum said.

By the end of July, the Guard is slated to have eight combat brigades on the ground in Iraq.

But in the meantime, he isn't worried about the monthly recruiting goals.

He called them “artificial,” “misleading,” and “meaningless.”

The two numbers he said he does care about are the authorized end strength and the actual end strength.

The Army Guard is authorized to have 350,000 soldiers but, as of the July 11, it had about 333,300.

“If I cannot close that gap, then I have to ask for additional incentives,” he said.

“I have to ask for more bonuses. I have got to start changing some of the business model.”

Veterans Converge On Dallas To Celebrate 20 Years Of Waging Peace And To Say "No To War."

July 26, 2005 Veterans For Peace: www.veteransforpeace.org

Who: Veterans For Peace, a national organization of military veterans including men and women from World War II, Korea, Vietnam, the Gulf War, the Iraq War, other conflicts and peacetime, chartered in 1985.

What: 2005 Veterans For Peace National Convention, at the University of Dallas in Texas, August 4th -7th

Why: To celebrate 20 Years of Waging Peace and to give Real Support for The Troops, by demanding Bring Them Home Now and Take Care of Them When They Get Here.

Each year Veterans For Peace holds a national convention to examine current world conflicts, the U.S. government's role in these conflicts and ways to address ending war as a means to solve conflicts.

This year Veterans For Peace, founded in 1985, has an ambitious program to celebrate 20 Years of Waging Peace, to Remember the 60th anniversary of the bombing of Nagasaki and Hiroshima and the men and women who fought and died in World War II and to discuss strategies and techniques to counter militarism and war.

There will be a focus on the war in Iraq: what's really happening to our troops and the people of Iraq, holding the Bush administration accountable for lying to the nation to take us to war and examining the structural causes of war.

Featured speakers include: Jim Hightower, Texas native national radio commentator, writer, public speaker, and author of the New York Times best seller, Thieves In High Places: They've Stolen Our Country And It's Time to Take It Back. Journalist Dahr Jamail spent several months "un-embedded" reporting on the war in Iraq. His dispatches are widely recognized as an important resource for learning the truth about events in Iraq. He is now writing for the Inter Press Service, The Asia Times and many other outlets.

Professor Satoru Konishi is a nuclear bomb survivor or hibakusha, from Japan. Born in 1929, he was 16 years old when the A-bomb was dropped on Hiroshima. Coleen Rowley is the well-known FBI agent and lawyer who in May 2002 criticized the agency for ignoring evidence before 9-11 that hinted of an impending attack.

Cindy Sheehan a member of Military Families Speak Out, and a founding member of Gold Star Families for Peace. Her son Casey, a U.S. soldier, was killed in Iraq on April 4, 2004. Since April, Cindy has traveled all over the country telling Casey's story.

Mike Hoffman, former Marine Corporal and co-founder of Iraq Veterans Against the War. As a Marine Corporal, Mike deployed with his unit to Iraq in February 2003. He fought in both Tikrit and Baghdad. Though he had his doubts about the war from the start, he saw going to Iraq as a matter of professionalism and loyalty. But it soon became clear to him that the US occupation was doing more harm than good-to both Iraqis and Americans.

Camilo Mejia was sentenced to a year in military prison in May 2004 for refusing to return to the war in Iraq after being home on leave. He is the first Iraq war veteran to file for discharge from the army as a conscientious objector. "By putting my weapon down, I chose to reassert myself as a human being." Released in February 2005, he has been speaking out ever since.

Veterans For Peace is a national organization founded in 1985. It is structured around a national office in Saint Louis, MO and comprised of members across the country organized in chapters or as at-large members.

The organization includes men and women veterans from World War II, Korea, Vietnam, the Gulf War, other conflicts and "peacetime" veterans.

Our collective experience tells us wars are easy to start and hard to stop and that those hurt are often the innocent. Thus, other means of problem solving are necessary.

About Half Of Troops Turn Down Voluntary Anthrax Vaccinations

July 25, 2005 By Deborah Funk, Army Times staff writer

About half of the U.S. service members and civilian workers offered anthrax vaccinations under the Pentagon's temporary, voluntary program are accepting the shots — and the other half are saying, "No thanks."

"We wish it was higher because that's about 50 percent (who are) vulnerable. But that is what you get when you give people the choice," said Army Col. John Grabenstein, director of the Military Vaccine Agency, which oversees implementation of the anthrax vaccinations. [If he means the 50% who took the shots are "vulnerable," he's right. Too many troops have gotten totally fucked up from them.]

Roughly 20,000 military members have been offered the vaccine since the government launched its voluntary program May 19. Of those, about half have accepted vaccination.

Grabenstein said troops who received shots under the old mandatory program are more likely to volunteer under this program so they can continue the vaccination series.

Conversely, people who were never vaccinated against anthrax are more likely to decline the shots.

The participation level may reflect the rare opportunity service members have to make choices while in the military, and some may decline the shot "just for the taste of liberty," Grabenstein said. [What a condescending, sneering asshole. Evidently he's too stupid to understand that the word about the horrifying side effects has gotten around. So he comes on like the troops are silly little children defying daddy. Fuck him. He can go shit in his hat, if he can find his hat, if he can shit.]

Some may decline it because they dislike the idea of getting the shots, or have no experience with the anthrax vaccine, he said. [He just won't quit. Everything that comes out of his mouth insults and degrades the troops. He just can't deal with the fact that soldiers are not stupid, and are trained to avoid unnecessary risk. This guy is head of a military vaccine program? And this is his attitude? What is he, a retread from an animal experiments lab?]

The government launched its voluntary program after six service members and civilian employees successfully sued the government to stop the mandatory program that began in 1998. A federal judge ruled the vaccine was not properly licensed to protect against the inhalational form of anthrax, and therefore, the government could not force service members to take the shots for that purpose.

Grabenstein said there have been “zero” punishments for service members who have not volunteered for the new program. [Amazing news! Especially since ANY punishment for ANYONE refusing the shot would be a criminal violation of the UCMJ. My my, he brags about not breaking the law. He better not lift one finger to harass one soldier, or he’s shit in the wind.]

“When it was mandatory, it was a loyalty program by the senior leadership for no one to challenge the implementation,” Mark Zaid, a Washington attorney who represents the six plaintiffs in the lawsuit, said.

“As a voluntary program, it still remains a loyalty program for those who may be recipients. I have little doubt that many people are taking it on faith that ‘if the leadership said it is good, that’s what I’m going with.’ “

Zaid said he also suspects defense officials have downplayed information contradictory to their position that the vaccine is safe and effective.

In separate attacks in Baghdad, guerrillas fatally shot a police officer as he was driving from his home in the Shiite enclave of Sadr City.

Two Iraqi security personnel were killed and three wounded by mortar fire near Baiji while guarding an oil pipeline, police said.

Six Iraqi soldiers were killed in three separate attacks in Samarra, Kirkuk and Baquba, according to police and army officials.

Two police officer brothers were found dead inside their parked car in Baghdad.

In Irbil, seven people including a police man were also killed in clashes between the Iraqi police and guerrillas.

Also an explosive devise blew up in an Iraqi police squad but no casualties were reported.

An Intelligence officer was assassinated by unknown militants who opened fire in the heart of Basra Tuesday. Police sources said the militants managed to escape after the shooting.

Two police were killed by a mortar on Baghdad's southern outskirts, and three more were killed by a rocket attack in Hilla, a town further south, police said.

Militants attacked the Major Crimes Unit in the Karkh area, west of the Tigris river. An Iraqi military statement said one policeman was injured and two suspects were detained.

A paramedic and an Iraqi woman were killed during clashes between the Iraqi army and insurgents in Mosul, in the predominantly Arab district of Risala

Three Ministry of Health workers were shot dead in their car in the eastern suburb of Maamil.

Militants killed a Pakistani truck-driver in Tikrit. A police source said they found his body in his truck.

Guerrillas opened fire on a bus carrying employees home from a factory in Abu Ghraib, west of Baghdad, on Tuesday, killing up to 17 people, police and hospital sources said.

The police sources said the al-Faris factory worked on reconstruction projects. Insurgents often target Iraqis seen as working for the U.S.-backed authorities.

July 19, 2005 Anti-Allawi-group

Che-Leila member Takawira Interviews Ethiopian Marxist Mohamed Hassan

Mohamed Hassan:

In Saudi Arabia now there is a very big movement, military and non-military.

There is a civil movement which was hidden and organised secretly, and there is also military combat. The day before yesterday they have discovered according to Saudi reports, a lot of weapons captured at the border with Yemen. This shows that a big part of the Saudi armed forces are connected to and supporting the movement.

The al-Qaeda branch in Saudi Arabia is a nationalist movement. They want to overthrow the regime and establish democratic country, democratic within their own culture and values, and also to control their own national resources which are totally controlled by US Imperialism.

If they succeed in Saudi Arabia the result will be that the other small feudal states will collapse. US Imperialism of course will be weakened if these people succeed in Saudi Arabia.

Taka: Do you think that this analysis has to be popularised in the West?

MH: It has to be popularised.

Taka: To make sense of what's going on?

MH: To make sense of what's going on.

First of all there is very little to no reports in the Western media.

In the whole Gulf States there are seven million workers. Sixty percent of them are from the Third World.

The remaining forty percent are from imperialist countries who earn on average seventy times what they were earning in their own country. They are living in ghettos. These ghettos are the opposite of the ghettos in the imperialist countries where there is poverty, but the ghettos of these white so-called expatriates working in these countries are the most luxurious ghettos with swimming pools, everything is inside and they are walled in.

The excuse for this is that these countries are Islamic. Inside these ghettos there is no Islamic law, women are walking around like any beaches in Greece or Spain, whiskey is sold openly there and they are living exactly, in fact they are living in better conditions than their own countries.

500,000 Saudis have studied in the best universities of the West and have returned home, and none of them have any function in the running of their country! They are forced to do other types of businesses. They cannot get employment in the government, they cannot reform their own country, and they cannot demand accountability.

There is not even a minister for finance who does book-keeping for the economy for what is coming in and out of the country!

All these people are demanding reform. This has forced the Saudi regime to establish what they call 'Shura', which means a sort of parliament. Saudi women who cannot vote are also demanding their rights.

People talk about the Taliban who are very brutal and anti-women, but they never speak about the condition of women in Saudi Arabia, they never speak about the condition of women in Kuwait, in Bahrain and so on.

Taka: More than that, not only do they not speak about this reform movement, they depict it as a movement that does not want to give women rights, that it is a movement in which women play no role. It is presented often as a militant Wahabbi movement. That's often as sophisticated as it gets in the newspapers. Would you agree that this is a big problem that there is a lack of analysis, let alone profound analysis to what's going on there?

MH: The jihadist movement in Saudi or in Egypt, despite the fact that they are taking their inspiration and ideology from Islamic thinking; it is basically a nationalist movement, a nationalist movement with an Islamic colour.

Wahabbism is in fact a creation of British Imperialism itself; secondly the Wahabbis are in power. Wahabbism is the ideological wing of the regime in Saudi Arabia. They are exporting Wahabbism to destabilise progressive governments and movements in the Muslim countries. Wahabbism is the perfect ideological weapon against progressive, democratic and revolutionary movements.

The nationalist movements in the Gulf States have nothing to do with Wahabbism, no; it is rather a democratic revolutionary movement, a nationalist movement which has a religious cover due to the situation in their countries.

Of course Saudi Arabia is an Islamic country where Wahabbism has ruled for a very long time. Saudi is the place where the holiest shrine of Islam is, it is the most important place for the Islamic world. So their movement's mobilisation uses religion and nationalism combined to fight against imperialism and neo-colonialism.

It is a nationalist movement and you can see that they are attacking Western interests. When they attack expatriates they want them to leave, to make them panic and frighten them and away and to disturb the economy of the regime in so doing.

They are not attacking them because they are whites or non-Muslims. Most of the expatriates are military people who train the Saudi state, armed forces and security companies. So the targets are military targets despite the fact that they are wearing civilian clothes, but they are military people who train the Saudi regime to maintain itself. It has nothing to do with Christianity, no, it's a nationalist movement.

Wahabbism is the ideological wing of the Saudi regime. Wahabbism is the most reactionary and backward Islamic sect. It started in the 18th century of a person called Abdul ibn Wahab. He himself was killed by Mohammed Ali, he was hanged in Istanbul. Mohammed Ali at that time was the one who was ruling Egypt.

Wahabbism is also an ideology which wants to split the Islamic community deeper and deeper. So the British and later the USA supported the rise of Wahabbism, and then vast amounts of oil were discovered there. Then Wahabbism became in the Cold War the best means to fight nationalist movements.

For example, the Republican movement of Yemen which overthrew the feudal regime of Imam Yahyah in northern Yemen. Nasser was supporting this movement by sending military officers to help the new republic. The Wahabbis in Saudi Arabia with the means of the large amounts of money they have, used propaganda and sabotage in Yemen utilising the backwardness there.

It is the Wahabbi ideology and the oil money which brought the collapse of the Republic of North Yemen and also in the south of Yemen which was a very progressive and socialist country. It was destroyed by the Wahabbis. The Saudi family made an embargo against south Yemen trying to destroy its economy. They have played the same role in Somalia, Sudan and other countries.

The last important thing I would like to say is that time is over when you can go ten thousand kilometres away and you can bomb and kill and eliminate people and still remain safe in the centre.

In one of the speeches by Ho Chi Minh he stated that between 1886 and 1911 over 8 million Congolese were killed by the colonialists. There was no reaction and no one was punished for that, but now I think it is not like before, you cannot go and bomb outside.

The retaliation of those who have been bombed will come back to the centre. The situation has changed. 11th September proves this, so does Madrid and now London and even other ones will prove this.

The British people have a greater responsibility to who to vote for and what kind of world they need.

They cannot live peacefully while their leaders are waging war everywhere and killing innocent people while they can live and travel peacefully. It's not possible.

I think the left has to understand that and explain to their population.

We are not in the time of the Berlin Conference of 1884 of colonising the world, we are not in the 1920s, we are in 2005.

The last fifty years has changed dramatically the consciousness of the Third World peoples, and I think one of the results is that if you touch me, well ...terrorism is always the weapon of the weak.

“The Idea That The Occupation Is Holding Back Civil War Is A Fiction”

July 20, 2005 Rohan Pearce, Green Left Weekly

All movements that have engaged in “asymmetric” (guerrilla) warfare against the US empire have been labelled “terrorists”. Thus the National Liberation Front in southern Vietnam was labelled “Viet Cong terrorists” by US officials up to 1968, when Washington was forced to enter into peace negotiations with it.

Today Washington is trying to smear the Iraqi national liberation fighters with the “terrorist” tag.

The idea that the occupation is holding back civil war is a fiction.

Sami Ramadani, a political refugee from Saddam Hussein's regime and a senior lecturer at London Metropolitan University, explained in a July 5 article for the British Guardian that some "pro-war commentators warned early on that the country would be blighted by sectarian violence: oppressed Shias would take revenge on Sunnis; Kurds would avenge Saddam's rule by killing Arabs; and the Christian community would be liquidated...

“(But what) actually happened confounded such expectations.

Within two weeks of the fall of Baghdad, millions converged on Karbala chanting ‘La Amreeka, la Saddam’ (No to America, no to Saddam).

For months, Baghdad, Basra and Najaf were awash with united anti-occupation marches whose main slogan was ‘La Sunna, la Shia; hatha al-watan menbi'a’ (no Sunni, no Shia, this homeland we shall not sell).

“Such responses were predictable given Iraq's history of anti-sectarianism. But the war leaders reacted by destroying the foundations of the state and following the old colonial policy of divide and rule, imposing a sectarian model on every institution they set up, including arrangements for the January election.

“When it became clear that the poorest areas of Baghdad and the south were even more hostile to the occupation than the so-called Sunni towns — answering the Shia cleric Moqtada al-Sadr's call to arms — Bush and Blair tried to defeat the resistance piecemeal, under the guise of fighting foreign terrorists.

Abu Musab al-Zarqawi was promoted to replace Saddam as the bogeyman in chief, to encourage sectarian tension and isolate the resistance.”

At a media briefing on June 27, the commander of US forces in Iraq, General George Casey, admitted that over the previous seven weeks there had been between 450 and 500 insurgent attacks in Iraq.

He claimed that most of these were “car-bomb attacks and the suicide car-bomb attacks against innocent civilians” carried out by “foreign fighters” (in the Orwellian worldview of the US empire-builders, this is term that does not apply to the 160,000 US and allied non-Iraqi troops in Iraq, or the 20,000 foreign mercenaries — “private security contractors” — working the Pentagon and US corporations in Iraq.)

A June 23 working draft of Iraq's Evolving Insurgency, a report produced by the CSIS, includes estimates of insurgent attacks between September 2003 and October 2004 categorised by target.

It reveals that three-quarters of the attacks were on the occupation forces; the next most targetted group was the Iraqi police (4.8% of the attacks). These facts are never reflected in the Western mass media's Iraq reportage.

Just as the resistance of the Vietnamese people eventually created a political crisis for the US rulers that led to the withdrawal of foreign troops from Vietnam, so too the Iraqi resistance has the potential to derail Bush's Middle East empire-building crusade.

The brutal truth is that it is the casualties sustained by US troops in Iraq, more than any other single factor, that has led to the drop in public support for the US counterinsurgency war.

According to a June 23-26 Washington Post-ABC News poll, 69% of US voters surveyed said that there had been an unacceptable level of US casualties in Iraq.

In his Guardian op-ed, Ramadani argued: "Every day the occupation increases tension and makes people's lives worse, fuelling the violence. Creating a client regime in Baghdad, backed by permanent bases, is the route that US strategists followed in Vietnam.

"As in Vietnam, popular resistance in Iraq and the wider Middle East will not go away but will grow stronger, until it eventually unites to force a US-British withdrawal."

There's nothing quite like invading somebody else's country, busting into their house by force of arms, and tromping through their living space while their kids are trying to eat dinner, scaring the shit out of them. It is guaranteed to arouse an intense desire to kill you in any patriotic, self-respecting civilian who lives there.

But your commanders know that, don't they? Don't they?

Do you have a friend or relative in the service? Forward this E-MAIL along, or send us the address if you wish and we'll send it regularly. Whether in Iraq or stuck on a base in the USA, this is extra important for your service friend, too often cut off from access to encouraging news of growing resistance to the war, at home and inside the armed services. Send requests to address up top.

How Bad Is It? “We Are Preparing Them For Failure” Officer Says

Jul. 25, 2005 By Drew Brown, Knight Ridder Newspapers

WASHINGTON - Too many of Iraq's new police officers are barely literate, some have shown up for training with criminal records, and the extent of insurgent infiltration in their ranks is largely unknown, according to a new U.S. government report issued Monday.

"We are preparing them for failure," the report quoted one unidentified officer as saying. Another said that it is "widely perceived that the police are under-trained and underpaid."

Iraqi police also have had a difficult time escaping their reputation for brutality and corruption under Saddam Hussein. International trainers frequently report "breakdowns in discipline, feuds among police units and prisoner abuse," the report said.

Iraq:

This Is Now An Unwinnable Conflict

[Thanks to Phil G and Ward R for sending this in.]

Ironically, the US and Britain pretended in 2003 that Saddam ruled a powerful state capable of menacing his neighbours. Secretly they believed this was untrue and expected an easy victory.

Now in 2005 they find to their horror that there are people in Iraq more truly dangerous than Saddam, and they are mired in an un-winnable conflict.

7.24.04 Patrick Cockburn, Independent News & Media (UK) Ltd.

The Duke of Wellington, warning hawkish politicians in Britain against ill-considered military intervention abroad, once said: "Great nations do not have small wars."

He meant that supposedly limited conflicts can inflict terrible damage on powerful states. Having seen what a small war in Spain had done to Napoleon, he knew what he was talking about.

The war, which started out as a demonstration of US strength as the world's only superpower, has turned into a demonstration of weakness. Its 135,000-strong army does not control much of Iraq.

The suicide bombing campaign in Iraq is unique. Never before have so many fanatical young Muslims been willing to kill themselves, trying to destroy those whom they see as their enemies. On a single day in Baghdad this month 12 bombers blew themselves up. There have been more than 500 suicide attacks in Iraq over the last year.

It is this campaign which has now spread to Britain and Egypt.

The shrill denials by Tony Blair and Jack Straw that hostility to the invasion of Iraq motivated the bombers are demonstrably untrue.

The findings of an investigation, to be published soon, into 300 young Saudis, caught and interrogated by Saudi intelligence on their way to Iraq to fight or blow themselves up, shows that very few had any previous contact with al-Qa'ida or any other terrorist organisation previous to 2003.

It was the invasion of Iraq which prompted their decision to die.

Some 36 Saudis who did blow themselves up in Iraq did so for similar reasons, according to the same study, commissioned by the Saudi government and carried out by a US-trained Saudi researcher, Nawaf Obaid, who was given permission to speak to Saudi intelligence officers.

A separate Israeli study of 154 foreign fighters in Iraq, carried out by the Global Research in International Affairs Centre in Israel, also concluded that almost all had been radicalised by Iraq alone.

The bombers have paralysed Baghdad. I have spent half my time living in Iraq since the invasion. The country has never been so dangerous as today.

The detonations of the suicide bombs make my windows shake in their frames in my room in the al-Hamra hotel. Sometimes, thinking the glass is going to shatter, I take shelter behind a thick wall. The hotel is heavily guarded. At one time the man who looked for bombs under cars entering the compound with a mirror on the end of a stick carried a pistol in his right hand. He reckoned that if he did discover a suicide bomber he had a split second in which to shoot him in the head before the driver detonated his bomb.

The bombers, or rather the defences against them, have altered the appearance of Baghdad. US army and Iraqi government positions in Baghdad are surrounded by ramparts of enormous cement blocks which snake through the city. Manufactured in different sizes, each of which is named after a different American state such as Arkansas and Wisconsin, these concrete megaliths are strangling the city by closing off so many streets.

The last time I drove into west Baghdad from the airport in early July we were suddenly stopped by the sound of volleys of shots. This turned out to be the police commandos, a 12,000-strong paramilitary force which is meant to be the cutting edge of the government offensive against the insurgents.

Drivers slammed on their brakes since people detained by the commandos, often for no known reason, are often found later in rubbish dumps, having been tortured and executed.

The government, whose members seldom emerge from the Green Zone, make bizarre efforts to pretend that there are signs of a return to normality.

Last week a pro-government newspaper had an article on the reconstruction of Baghdad. Above the article was a picture of a crane at a building site. But there are no cranes at work in Baghdad so the paper had been compelled to use a photograph of a crane which has been rusting for more than two years, abandoned at the site of a giant mosque that Saddam Hussein was constructing when he was overthrown.

The same quality of make-believe mars British and American policy in Iraq. The current motto of both governments is to "stay the course in Iraq". This may be useful propaganda at home but Iraqi government officials counter that London and Washington have no "course" in Iraq, only a policy of endless zig-zags.

For future historians Iraq will probably replace Vietnam as the stock example of the truth of Wellington's dictum about small wars escalating into big ones.

Ironically, the US and Britain pretended in 2003 that Saddam ruled a powerful state capable of menacing his neighbours. Secretly they believed this was untrue and expected an easy victory.

Now in 2005 they find to their horror that there are people in Iraq more truly dangerous than Saddam, and they are mired in an un-winnable conflict.

[Thanks to JM who sent this in. She writes: I've read what you have sent on China and I've some things you may not have seen.

[Firstly the press, controlled by the government, is getting more daring. Secondly the increasing trouble seems to have started amongst the peasants.

Revolts of Despoiled Peasants in China Defy the Authorities

23 June 2005 By Brice Pedroletti, Le Monde

Huankantou - an archipelago of villages that includes some 20,000 people, not far from Yiwu, in Zhejiang Province (East China), and the seat of a violent revolt April 10 - lives in fear of arrests.

The population of this "cancer village," which forced out 3,000 police and municipal employees who had come to oust the demonstrators in front of 13 chemical factories installed in the middle of their fields, is not really sorry for their gesture of defiance.

"The important thing is to stop the factories. There are days when everyone has red eyes. And then days when you want to vomit," says one woman. There have also been cancers and birth defects, which the residents started blaming the polluters for a few years ago. "But the local government has never supported us," says one villager.

For about ten days, the insurgents were not worried.

"We got rid of the police ourselves. They didn't dare come back," says one man.

Hundreds of curious people from neighboring villages come by every day to admire the trophies of their anger: overturned cars and buses, uniforms and helmets of policemen.

The Chinese press has not whispered a word about it. Around April 20, the authorities had the wrecked vehicles taken away. A big sign was placed at the entry to the industrial park, prohibiting any loading. Migrant workers deserted the place. Then little booklets were distributed to all families: they include the law regarding respect for the environment and a law about respect for public order. Finally, a notice ordered those responsible for the April 10 destructions to hand themselves in to the police. Since then, a diffuse terror has overcome the households.

Between two little buildings, the villagers crowd together and relate: "They began to arrest people May 21. They come in civilian clothes. Even people who took no part in the uprisings have been arrested. We're worried; we don't know what will happen," says one woman.

At the edge of one of the villages, Wang Fagen owns a recycling business. The man has been without news of his 25 year old son since May 25: "They called him to go to the police station. He had participated in the destruction of a car. He went. Someone who had been arrested came back and said he had been beaten," he says. "We're worried about him. He's a good boy. But we don't know anyone in the government," a neighbor woman implores.

Already numerous in China, peasant uprisings are taking an ever more violent turn: at first baffled and powerless in the face of local governments anxious to get rich by favoring new industrial implantations in the country (urban areas are saturated), rural communities are less and less credulous and submissive today. They have quickly abandoned any hope of economic trickledown: salaries are too low and factories employ migrants from still poorer districts.

Apart from pollution, the issue of land feeds the greatest resentments: in Huankantou, as in Wuli, the peasants deem that the government has deprived them of lands that they were supposed to be able to cultivate for thirty years, the State remaining the owner of all land in China.

The Chinese press, which rarely allows itself to echo these incidents, has nonetheless reported another development: Shengyou, a village in the Hebei Province, situated around Beijing, which rejected the proposed compensation for having an electric generating station established on its lands, was the victim of violent reprisals.

Two months ago, about twenty young men attacked the villagers, who succeeded in capturing one of their assailants. Saturday, June 11, 300 more young men, armed with rifles and billy clubs, fell on the little village in the small hours of the morning. Six peasants died and over a hundred were wounded during the attacks. The Mayor and the Head of the District Communist Party were removed from their posts. The electric generating station's contractor, subsequently identified by the police, had formed the commando unit.

The concession to the peasants for exploitation of lands had previously allowed the maintenance of subsistence agriculture in the countryside and slowed the rural exodus and its secondary effects, such as the creation of slums and pauperization of migrants. Rampant industrialization weakens that balance and threatens the country's sacrosanct stability.
